

Theodoros Ellinoudis belongs to the Special Teaching Staff of TEFAA Serres, in the Aristotle University of Thessaloniki, on subjects of School Physical Education and Teaching of Physical Education in Primary and Secondary Education. He teaches the courses of School Physical Education and Practical training in Schools. He holds a PhD from the Democritus University of Thrace (2007), with the title of doctoral dissertation "Application of the «Movement Assessment Battery for Children» on Greek elementary school students 9-12 years old".

He also holds a master's degree in pedagogy from the Democritus University of Thrace (2001), with a master's thesis entitled "The effect of the age on the detection and evaluation of movement difficulties in primary schoolchildren". He has published in scientific journals and presentations at scientific conferences on the area of movement difficulties of primary school children and the evaluation of movement difficulties by teachers and parents. His research interests focus on school physical education, assessment and the detection of motor difficulties. He has published articles in international peer-reviewed journals and has given over 20 presentations at international conferences.